

Headless, yet somehow still fixated on her flaws,
A fleshy vapor dreams up symmetries,
And imagines two equal anchors,
Slim and tapered,
With matching stripes-
A coat of arms for what little's left,
A family crest for the indisposed,
A heraldry of her sorry plight,
To hang upon the brushy dark,
Above her own upended self.